

Interim Protective Measures and Accommodations

Upon learning of an incident of Sexual or Gender-Based Misconduct involving a member of the University community, the Title IX Coordinator will take immediate steps and interim measures to ensure the safety and well-being of the victim, such as the ability to move dorms, change work schedules, alter academic schedules, withdraw from/retake a class without penalty, and access academic support (e.g., tutoring). Additional Interim Measures that may be implemented while an investigation is pending may include the issuance of no contact orders and changing the Respondent's living arrangements or course schedule.

When warranted to protect the Complainant, the Title IX Coordinator may implement one or more Interim Measures, if appropriate and/or reasonably available, including but not limited to the following:

- a. Issuing of mutual no-contact orders to prevent any contact between the Complainant, the Respondent, witnesses, and/or third parties to ensure the safety of all parties and the integrity of the process;
- b. Providing the Complainant an escort to ensure that he or she can move safely between classes, work, and/or activities;
- c. Changing a Complainant's or a Respondent's on-campus housing, if any, to a different on-campus location and providing assistance from University support staff in completing the relocation;
- d. Rescheduling class work, assignments, and examinations;
- e. Changing work arrangements or schedules;
- f. Providing academic support services such as: providing alternative course completion options, dropping a course without penalty, or transferring to a different class section (with the agreement of the appropriate faculty);
- g. Limiting an individual or organization's access to certain University facilities or activities pending resolution of the matter.
